of exorbitant price-rise of steel especially in the past one month, although it had been rising during the last one year. When would steel authorities in India rise to the occasion and respond to the critical situation as obtained in the steel-consuming industry, especially in the small-scale sector? A large number of small-scale units engaged in the production of cycle and its parts, auto parts, hand tools, hardware and fans, etc., have already succumbed to the pressure of the steep rise in the price of steel; and many more are on the verge of closure.

Undoubtedly, the Government have been encouraging the small-scale sector and the industry has also been responding through appreciable development and employment generation, but looking at the situation being faced by the steel-based industry on account of steep hike in the price of steel effected by the steel-producing giants, both in the public and the private sector, had virtually placed the small-scale sector in India in a Catch 22 situation.

The irony of fate is that the steel-based industry in the small-scale sector in India has been incapacitated to face the competition with China in particular, for the reason that steel exported by Indian steel giants to China is cheaper than that sold by them in the country where the prices are exorbitant. The steel giants/exporters, by adding export benefits to the export price get more than fully compensated. The export price happened to be around Rs.14,000 per metric tonne and the price charged in the country is more than Rs.20,000. अभी अभी 22-23 हजार तक हो गए हैं This rise of about Rs.8,000 per metric tonne in just one year has sent shock waves to the small-scale sector in the country. This price-hike has added much to the woes of the small-scale sector. It is beyond comprehension why the authorities concerned have not concentrated on the solution to the problem, and may it be expected that immediate meetings with industrialists concerned would be convened to find a solution.
